This is plain stupid since a crack will bypass this.Q: Rails 4: accessing class variable within a partial I have a project where I need to populate a table of titles on each page of my project. Unfortunately the titles are stored as class variables, and the project is structured by page, so I am forced to use a partial as a sort of display template to insert the titles. This is great, except I cannot seem to access my class variables from within my partial. In my project I have the following: 1) Application Controller 2) Home controller 3) Home view 4) Partial Notice how my partial calls on a home.slim layout to get access to the title class variable. I added this only as an example. In my case I need to be able to access other class variables in the same way. How can I access the class variables stored in the title module, as if it were a class method? A: As the app_controller.rb is inherited by the HomeController, you can set it in the method. I recommend you to find the source of your Home controller and find the appropriate place where the title is modified. For example, you can inherit it from ApplicationController and set it there. News 23rd Nov 2019 Veneo successfully tests fuel cell for CVs Veneo has successfully tested the hydrogen-powered fuel cell for compressed air systems in combustion engine based vehicles. In conventional drives the fuel cells have up to two times the power and are significantly quieter than most conventional battery powered electric vehicles. Veneo is considered an early system mover since the systems have been tested in customer CVs but Veneo's system is not installed in any of the vehicles.
